Do you feel able to talk to your child about the changes they will experience such as puberty?	100% of respondents answered Yes
Looking at the Relationships and Sex Education Curriculum overview in the draft policy are you satisfied that the content is appropriate?	96.12 % of respondents felt the Content is fully appropriate for all age groups. 3.88% of respondents felt that the content is not appropriate in the following areas: Content not appropriate below year 5
Do you feel that Relationships and Sex Education is an important part of the curriculum that makes a difference to young people?	100 % of respondents said yes. Additional comments made included points on: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • That it is great that this subject matter is incorporated into their learning. • How it is important that school do this but that it is also role of parents at home to teach these things alongside school. • In Key Stage 2, I think it would also be good to see a focus on the relationship a child has with themselves, (a positive relationship with the self) and the benefits that brings. Also about the influence of media/celebrities on a child's self-image, body image and status.

Following the consultation with staff, parents and governors led to one change to the draft policy.

It was agreed by governors to remove the following section from the Health and Wellbeing section of the Lower Key Stage Two section of the draft party.

- How their body will, and their emotions may, change as they approach and move through puberty.

It was agreed that elements of the curriculum relating to this would be taught within Upper Key Stage Two.
